AIR DE PARIS - PARIS, FRANCE

I don't believe in art. I believe in artists. - Marcel Duchamp

In the year 1990, Florence Bonnefous and Edouard Merino founded the gallery called Air de Paris, paying tribute to Marcel Duchamp. The two have known each other since their hey days in the Magasin school in the southern French city of Grenoble. Their love for the arts has manifested in their gallery as they exhibit young talented artists from Grenoble; Pierre Joseph, Bernard Joisten, Dominique Gonzalez-Foerster and Philippe Perrin before the world gawks amazingly at their end results.

Air de Paris has gained amazing recognition and has achieved a respected reputation as they represent renowned artists such as: Philippe Parreno, Liam Gillick, Rob Pruitt, Trisha Donnelly, Bruno Serralongue and Torbjørn Rødland and a portfolio of historical artists such as Guy de Cointet, Dorothy Iannone, Allen Ruppersberg as well as new comers from the likes of Leonor Antunes, Stephane Dafflon, Aaron Flint Jamison and many more to come.

From October 31 to December 19, collective artist Claire Fontaine is presenting a new selection of works in the arts gyrating around the emotional bankruptcy of our times. The title of the exhibition suggests that our need for love is almost unlimited and it cannot be satisfied by the current configuration of society but also that in our world, more than ever before, good intentions cannot be carried out without material means. The exhibition tackles the issues of exclusion and inclusion, security and fear, through the conceptual use of diverse medias.

If you are seeking a new, fresh state of the art inspiration, this exhibit show cases a new series of fresh paintings, neon signs and anagrams. Be sure to check out the gallery's website for further functions.
